BASIS FOR RECOMMENDATION:

Architecture:

One and a half story L-plan, cross-gabled raised frame Queen Anne-style house with a projecting front-gabled canted bay, a prominent front gable in the center of the main façade, and a central, hipped roof. The house has a battered, shingled raised basement, and a wraparound porch on fluted columns with Ionic capitals. Fenestration consists of a combination of casement and 2:2 double-hung windows. A 1970s addition was made to the back of the house.

Historical Associations:

The ca. 1915 house was built for Walter and Else Wupperman, who purchased the property in 1914 from prominent developer Sidon Harris, who developed areas to the southeast of Hyde Park such as College Court. Walter Wupperman was born in Germany in 1874, the son of Otto and Elise Tips Wupperman. Otto Wupperman had immigrated to Austin in 1849 and married Elise Tips, the sister of Walter Tips, and the daughter of a prominent local German-American family, but they returned to Germany in 1865. Walter came to Austin in 1898, where he met his future bride, Else von Rosenberg; the two were married in 1904. The couple first lived in Seguin, where Walter worked as a salesman for his brother's enamelware business; he then went to work for H.H. Voss, who had a large enamelware and hardware business in Austin. The 1910 U.S. Census shows Walter and Elsie Wupperman living at 601 Rio Grande Street; he was listed as a hardware merchant. In 1914, Walter gave up the houseware and hardware sales business in order to teach German at the University of Texas, but the advent of World War I put an end to teaching German language and culture at UT, and Walter lost his teaching position. He purchased this property in 1914 at the edge of town, where he believed that his family would enjoy greater health benefits, and contracted with the Calcasieu Lumber Company to build the house, which was completed in 1915. At the time that Wupperman purchased this property, there was little else in the area, and the Wuppermans had fruit orchards, a vegetable garden, chickens, and bees. Over time, with the loss of work and the Great Depression, Wupperman was forced to sell portions of his original land purchase. He worked for the Walter Tips Company for a number of years, and his 1917 World War I draft registration card shows that he was working as a book-keeper for the Austin Gas Light Company. He then went to work for the Internal Revenue Service as a deputy collector. He later worked as an auditor, accountant, and the book-keeper for the Becker Lumber Company. The 1930 U.S. Census shows the family living in this house, which was valued at $12,000. He is listed as a collector for the Internal Revenue Service. He and Else had five children, including his oldest son, Ernst, who obtained his veterinary training and opened the Wupperman Animal Hospital in 1941; this business later became the Wupperman-Spangler Animal Hospital. A cousin from Germany, Guenther Oswald, immigrated to Austin after World War II and went to work for the Calcasieu Lumber Company, but his love was restoring and refinishing furniture. He had his woodworking shop in the basement of this house, and became nationally known for his skill at refinishing fine antique furniture, including his work restoring and refinishing furniture from the Texas Governor's Mansion. Walter Wupperman died in 1950; his widow Else remained in the house until her death in 1967, renting rooms to students from the University of Texas. In 1968, the family sold the house to Frances Gerdes, a retired teacher who had taught at the pioneer school at Gussetville, Texas, and later at Palm School in downtown Austin. Mrs. Gerdes also rented rooms to UT students to fill the house and supplement her income.

Historic Narrative: The Wupperman House – 506 Texas Avenue

Montrose Place and Sidon Harris

In 1909, Sidon Harris, a prominent attorney and land developer, acquired property including the present location of the Wupperman Home, after Walter O. and Else Wupperman and family, from the Wildbahn Land Company. Mr. Harris secured the property described as “(27) twenty seven acres, more or less, and known as all of out lot (8) eight and about (2 ½) two and a half acres off the north side of out lot (7) seven ... all of which is in Division “C” in the City of Austin, in Travis County, Texas.”¹

The neighborhood surrounding the Wupperman Home, 506 Texas Avenue, is identified as “Montrose Place” in the property deed of 1914 from grantor Sidon Harris to grantee Walter Wupperman.² The street now known as Texas Avenue was to be named “Townes” apparently after the name of the president of the Wildbahn Land Company in 1914, Mr. John C. Townes.³ Although no filed plat of Montrose Place has been located in the Travis County Property Records, Sidon Harris’s influence in the development of this area of Austin north of the University of Texas is evident. Montrose Street, Harris Avenue, and Harris Park Boulevard in the immediate area are evidence of his influence in its development.

Sidon Harris “was admitted to the Texas State Bar in 1882, at the age of 21, and established offices for general practice in Austin.”⁴ He was successful as a lawyer and “known throughout Texas as a successful practitioner of land law.”⁵ In his later years Mr. Harris transitioned from land law to land development. In addition to “Montrose Place” he created College Court in Austin⁶ and additions in San Antonio and Houston.⁷

The W. A. Harper Sub-division

From 1917- 1922, prior to the subsequent division of the property, the Wupperman Home address is listed as 3701 Duval Street and as part of Hyde Park.⁸ In 1924 the Wupperman’s home address is listed as 502 E. 37th Street.⁹ The first recorded subdivision plat of the area was filed by W.A. Harper and Sam H. Hirschfeld in September of 1923. The plat is named “The W. A. Harper Sub-division of Parts of Outlot 7 & 8 Div. ‘C’ in the City of Austin Travis County, Texas”. The entire Block 3 of the subdivision is labeled "W. Wupperman Tract". The original Wupperman Tract in this subdivision is bounded by Duval Street to the west, Texas Avenue to the south, Liberty Street to the east, and Cleveland Avenue [38th Street] to the north.¹⁰ By 1927 the previous street in Austin named "Texas Avenue" was changed to Highland Avenue and the Wupperman's home address was now 502 Texas Avenue (formerly 37th Street).¹¹ By 1937 the Wupperman's street number was changed to 506 Texas Avenue.¹²

Walter Otto Wupperman and Elisabeth (Else) Maria Von Rosenberg

Otto Wupperman, father to Walter, had come to Texas in 1849 following a failed revolution in Germany.¹³ While in Texas, Otto Wupperman married Elise Tips (sister of Walter Tips, founder of the Tips Hardware Company of Austin). Otto and Elise were married at Liveoakhill near Seguin in September of 1850.¹⁴ Otto Wupperman and his wife returned to Germany in 1865, but his tales of "the physical hardships of pioneering in Texas ... largely offset by the freedom, mild climate and wild open spaces"¹⁵ may have encouraged Walter, born in Dusseldorf, Germany in 1874, to immigrate to Texas in 1898. "Raised amid some influence, in a city of culture, Walter wished to become an artist or musician".¹⁶ "So in 1898, when Walter was 24, he determined to move to Texas, where his parents had lived for ten or twelve years."¹⁷ "In Austin Walter met Miss Else (Elisabeth) von Rosenberg. Walter Wupperman and Else von Rosenberg were wed in April of 1904 by R.J. Briggs of the First Congregational Church of Austin."¹⁸

Walter had moved to Seguin as a salesman for his eldest brother's enamel wares business. The von Rosenberg family record continues, "and in Texas brother Richard had good use of Walter as an agent and salesman for the Herman Wupperman enamel wares, although Walter would rather have become a landscape artist or pianist. But in Texas, certainly these arts were then inadequate for bread and butter. Some work on the cattle ranch, and in hardware stores in Houston and Brenham provided further acquaintance with this strange new land".¹⁹

He also engaged in crockery and hardware merchandising. After two years in business with his brother in Seguin, and later with H.H. Voss in Austin, Walter sold out in 1914 in order to teach German in the University of Texas.”²⁰

But WWI brought an end to German at the University: “Then, during World War I, came a great hatred in the United States toward everything German; the teaching of German at the university was dropped and Walter lost his position! Even with proved citizenship Walter now found it exceedingly difficult to find work to support his large family (wife and four children).”²¹

With the advent of World War I and the loss of his position at the University of Texas, Mr. Wupperman worked as a bookkeeper with various firms including the Becker Lumber Company.²²

“But in 1912 and 1915 two babies [Eugene and Charlotte]²³ were lost in early infancy, and his dear father-in-law died. Meantime, the serious illnesses of his children had brought the realization that city life is unhealthy, so he moved his family to the edge of town, buying 2 ½ acres of land, surrounded by healthy meadows. Thereon was built a large comfortable home, with fruit orchard, vegetable garden, chickens and later bees. All this entailed considerable indebtedness.”²⁴

The actual amount of land purchased, according to the deed of 1914, was 1 5/6 acres in the northwest corner of Outlot 8, Division C, of Travis County city of Austin.²⁵ The construction of the home was begun in 1914 by the Calcasieu Lumber Company of Austin. Calcasieu Lumber Company acted as the builder and supplier for the project which was completed in 1915.²⁶

“Somewhat strict religious upbringing influenced his [Walter Wupperman] convictions which formed the basis of his emphasis on home, and firm and understanding control over his family for several years. With always meager funds, he nonetheless managed to maintain his large comfortable home, help the less fortunate and take genuine, enlightenment in humanity’s uplift and well being. He also enjoyed playing his viola in string quartettes and the Austin Symphony Orchestra.”²⁷

Property records indicate parcels within the Wupperman tract were sold from 1921-1933.²⁸ Surviving family member, Helene Dinwiddie, reports that land was sold in the hard times after World War I and during the Great Depression.²⁹

"The allowed shooting of wild rabbits and doves and son Walter's cows helped the food situation very considerably, as did wife Else's garden and chickens. Salary with Walter Tips Company [Walter Wupperman was Walter Tip's nephew³⁰] was also some better. So matters slowly improved; and slowly the hatred toward Germans cooled off.

At last Walter received a position as deputy Federal Income Tax Collector. This work, however, entailed much traveling, with extended periods away from home, until after eight years, Austin became his home territory."³¹

"Meantime, his beloved bees had died out, but the children were now grown, healthy and attending universities. Walter never became an artist or musician, but derived satisfaction from sketching and piano duet playing with son Alfred. He never became a skilled viola player, yet enjoyed participating with string quartettes and the Austin Symphony Orchestra. The large, now debt-free home grew lovelier and livelier from year to year, and five children became able adults. Four married, and Alfred, too, left home but Christmas reunions brought indescribable happiness and joy."³²

Walter Wupperman continued to work periodically as a public accountant, auditor, and an accountant for Becker Lumber Company.³³

Elisabeth (Else) Maria von Rosenberg, the eldest of seven siblings, was born in Austin in 1880. Her mother, Helene Lungkwitz, and father, Ernst von Rosenberg, were both from pioneer Texas families of German descent³⁴

"At concerts Else met her dear Walter. Both were handsome and dignified, with mutual love of fine music and art, and German background. They gave their children knowledge and pride in their ancestry... Else instilled in her five children the typical German housewifely thoroughness, well mixed with common sense and perseverance. They stood them all in good stead in the trying and frugal years of World War I and thereafter. They sold the horse and most of their real estate, and some household goods and the children never went hungry."³⁵

"Else, a lovely, jolly person, respected learning, art and music. She was also practical energetic, and resourceful. This was more important, for, in the frugal years, their orchard, garden and chickens became very helpful to her family and others. One wonders how many school lunches she prepared, over the years, each with loving concern for balanced nutrition. Her perseverance enabled her husband and three children to earn university degrees."³⁶

"She still enjoys concerts in her 83rd year, and is able to indulge her lifelong love for flowers and pot plants, indoors and out. And did you ever taste her cooking? Superb! Else is still active in the First Congregational Church of Austin, which her father had helped found, and is happy at its union with the Evangelical Church, that being Walter's church in his youth in Germany."³⁷

Walter and Else's children are Alice Margarethe Wupperman (b.1905), Ernst Walter Wupperman (b.1907), Alfred Otto Wupperman (b. 1909), Elisabeth Helene Wupperman Dinwiddie (b.1911), Viola Hildegard Wupperman Lindsay (b. 1918).³⁸

Alice Margarethe Wupperman, eldest of Walter and Else's children, graduated from the University of Texas with a bachelors degree in 1926. She became the supervisor librarian at the Pharmacy-Chemistry Library at U.T. (Mallet Library) from 1929 until 1940 when she moved to attend school at Columbia University. She held various positions over the years including technical librarian at Sperry Gyroscope Company on Long Island and head medical librarian at Harbor Hospital in Torrance, California³⁹

Ernst Walter Wupperman, eldest son of Walter and Else, received his Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree at Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College in 1933. ⁴⁰ By 1937 he had established a veterinary practice in Austin while still living with his parents.⁴¹ By 1941 Ernst Wupperman opened

Alfred Otto Wupperman attended the University of Texas while living at home on 506 Texas Avenue.⁴⁴ "At the University of Texas he took pre-law work, then teacher training and architectural engineering, but left before getting a degree."⁴⁵ Alfred pursued Civil Service and "received the highest score ever earned at that time on his exam."⁴⁶ Alfred worked as a draftsman while living at the Wupperman home in 1937.⁴⁷ Alfred Wupperman worked as a draftsman for Army Corps of Engineers. ⁴⁸"Alfred is definitely a liberal, politically, and has written many 'Letters to the Editor' in support of liberal views and, even nudism. He supports the Civil Liberties Union and the American Friends Service Committee (Quaker Relief), and is a member of the Congregational Church of Austin."⁴⁹ The Austin History Center Wupperman-Von Rosenberg file contains many of Alfred's letters to the Austin American Statesman, Fort Worth Star Telegram and Galveston newspapers. Alfred was president of National Nudist Council of America and a resident of the clothing optional New Manor Apartments at age 73 in 1982.⁵⁰ Alfred moved back to the family home prior to its sale in 1968.⁵¹

Helene Elisabeth Wupperman "received her B.S. degree in physical education at the University of Texas. She enjoyed interpretative dancing, and was an employee of the City Recreational Department of Austin, where she taught dancing swimming, and tennis."⁵² Helene was a member of the U.T. dance group Orchesis which presented one of the inaugural performances at the new U. grandmother, Elise Tips-Wupperman, also a mother of seven, who left Texas about 100 years ago".⁵⁵ Hildegard was a mother and housewife who, with her husband, was a lapidary artist creating costume jewelry.⁵⁶

Guenther Oswald, a German cousin, immigrated to Austin following World War II and lived at the home with the Wupperman family for several years.⁵⁷ Guenther was recruited during World War II to join Hitler's Luftwaffe, the German Air Force. "Oswald was injured five times during the war. The fifth time he was captured and sent to a prisoner of war camp in Colorado for the remainder of the war, about a year. Then he was returned to Germany."⁵⁸ Following Guenther's experience in America, he resolved to immigrate to America with his Austin relatives as his sponsors. But to immigrate he needed a trade. "Oswald completed a four-year apprenticeship as a woodworker in Germany and in 1952, when he was 32, moved to Austin and started work with the Calcasieu Lumber Co."⁵⁹ Mr. Oswald established his first woodworking shop in the basement of the Wupperman's home at 506 Texas Avenue.⁶⁰ Guenther earned nationwide recognition restoring, repairing and refinishing family heirlooms and antiques as ancient as 400 years old. "His projects have included repair and refinishing of furniture at the [Texas] Governor's Mansion, and restoration of the Walter Tips carriage. He also has worked on Boulle cabinets at the Neill-Cochran House and fabrication of a hand-hewn cross at the altar of the First Presbyterian Church."⁶¹ Guenther has received awards for his craftsmanship from the Heritage Society of Austin.⁶² Mr. Oswald is also an accomplished amateur paleontologist.⁶³

The end of the Wupperman occupation at 506 Texas Avenue

Walter Otto Wupperman died October 27, 1950. His wife, Else, continued to live in the family home on Texas Avenue until her death on October 27, 1967 exactly seventeen years after Walter's death.⁶⁴ According to the family there were several relatives and boarders (particularly students from the university) who regularly lived at the home. Son Alfred Wupperman returned to Austin to live in the home until it was sold in 1968 to Frances Gerdes.⁶⁵

Frances Stephenson Gerdes

Frances Gerdes purchased the Wupperman's home from Walter and Else's children in August of 1968. Most of the original 1 5/6 acre homestead had been subdivided and sold from 1921 to 1933.⁶⁶

Frances Stephenson (Gerdes) was born on June 21, 1914 in Beeville, Texas. She attended school in Beeville and earned her undergraduate and master's degree at Texas A & I in Kingsville.⁶⁷ "Frances began her career at the age of 18 teaching at the Gussetville School. Later, in Sinton, she was a dedicated teacher and positive influence on many lives."⁶⁸ Frances married Hillary Paul Gerdes and had two sons Steve and Paul.⁶⁹ From 1963 - 1966 Frances is listed as a teacher at the historic Palm School in downtown Austin. ⁷⁰ The Palm School was the site of the earliest school in Austin (Mrs. Amelia Barr's private school) and was named for the Swedish Consul at Austin, Swante Palm, in 1902.⁷¹ Mrs. Gerdes was retired from teaching at the time she lived at 506 Texas Avenue. She rented rooms to borders while she lived at the Wupperman home.⁷²

Architectural Description

The Wupperman Home at 506 Texas Avenue is a Victorian Style Queen Anne of the Free Classic sub-group. The Mc Alesters describe the Queen Anne style as, "Steeply pitched roof of irregular shape, usually with a dominant front-facing gable; patterned shingles, cutaway bay windows, and other devices used to avoid a smooth-walled appearance; asymmetrical façade with partial or full-width porch which is usually one story high and extended along one or both side walls."⁷³

The home's roof is cross gabled with a prominent front-facing gable. A hipped roof is over the 2nd story dormer. Lower cross gables form the roof of dining room wall projection on the west façade and bedroom on the east façade. A lower gabled roof also extends over a front projecting bay window. Wide trim is used in the gables and throughout the house. A small window and patterned shingles fill the tympanum above the bay window. Three (Palladian grouping) double-hung windows are present in prominent front gable tympanum. Wide roof overhangs break-up the vertical wall plane as described by the McAlesters, "use of overhanging gables and upper stories. Particularly characteristic features are roof gables that overhang bay windows shaped into the wall below (cutaway bay windows)".⁷⁴

The elements and orientation of the front porch is a defining characteristic of the Queen Anne Style and the sub-group Late Classic. Concerning Queen Anne porches the MacAlesters comment, "extensive one-story porches are common and accentuate the asymmetry of the façade. These always include the front entrance area and cover part or all of the front façade; they also commonly extend along one or both sides of the house."⁷⁵ The front porch of the Wupperman Home dominates the south façade (facing Texas Avenue) and extends two-thirds the width of the east façade. A portion of the porch on the east façade was screened to provide a mosquito-proof sleeping porch. A grandson of Walt and Else Wupperman remembers his grandfather and uncles sleeping on the porch on warm nights.⁷⁶ A wide stairway leads to the front door entrance area covered by the porch. Seven single neo-classical columns, which are characteristic of the Late Classic sub-group, are raised to the porch rail and support the flat porch roof. The wood column bodies are fluted and sit on coffered bases integrated with the porch rail. The columns are crowned by scroll (volute) capitals made of cast terra-cotta.

A raised basement supports the main floor of the Wupperman home. The home was raised to a height to take advantage of the cooling breezes of the prairieland.⁷⁷ The flared skirting of the raised basement is covered with alternate patterned shingles. Double-hung windows with two-over-two glazing are spaced along the basement skirting.

The body of the home is covered with shiplap siding. The front door is surrounded by transom and sidelights. With the exception of the bay window (two over two double-hung), the windows of the main floor are original hinged casement windows with paired one-over-one glazing. Each casement window includes a broken light transom above. The windows were flanked by louvered shutter. Several of these shutters remain.

The Wupperman home exemplifies the Queen Anne characteristic of avoiding flat surfaces: "by incorporating frequent bay windows and towers as well as through the use of wall inserts or projections which provide the random changes in the horizontal continuity of the plane."⁷⁸ The significant projection of the dining room (photo) breaks the continuity of the west façade of the the Wupperman home .

Outbuildings and Landscape Features

In addition to the home, there was a two-story barn with a hayloft on the upper level, horse stalls and room for two buggies on the lower level.⁷⁹ There was also a chicken house and chicken yard on the property. "Else's garden was several feet outside the house on the kitchen side. The orchard was west of the house. Peach, Plum, Apricot, and figs as well as pecan trees were grown. The pecan trees bordered Duval and Texas Ave."⁸⁰

Ongoing restoration

The Wupperman Home is currently undergoing restoration. The interior of the home has been restored and major mechanical systems have been updated to allow for owner occupation.

In 1968, after the sale of the home by the Wupperman family to Frances Gerdes, the front porch was enclosed.⁸¹ Recently the front porch has been opened and restored to its original size. The original screened sleeping-porch, which occupied a portion of the porch on the east side of the home, will be recreated from period photos of the home.

A family room, added to the rear of the home during the 1970's, has been rebuilt to better reflect the original style and age of the house. Windows reclaimed from the front porch enclosure and salvaged hardwood floors were utilized.

The restoration of the exterior façade is in process. Descendents of the Wupperman family remember the house was always painted white with color accenting the window moldings, screens, shutters and trim. Original photos from the newly constructed home, circa. 1920, suggest the skirting and body may have originally been colored with an aniline wood stain. Paint scrapings from the home reveal only white paint from the body of the home. The home will be repainted white with historically accurate accent colors on the shutters and window screens.

New landscaping, which will include fruit trees and a kitchen garden, an homage to Else's own garden, will complete the home restoration. The owners hope to have the exterior work underway by summer of 2010. They look forward to the day they can share this wonderful house and its gardens with family, friends and curious neighbors!

Criteria for Historic Landmark Designation of the Wupperman Home , 506 Texas Avenue

Architecture:

- The Wupperman Home embodies the characteristics of the Late Classic subgroup of the Queen Anne Style. A unique element of the home is the use of terracotta volute capitals on the classic support columns of the wrap-around front porch. The raised basement was designed to take advantage of cooling cross breezes could be considered a vernacular adaptation of the style.
- The home was constructed in 1914-1915 by the Calcasieu Lumber Company for the Wupperman family. The Calcasieu Lumber Company was a prominent builder in Austin for this time period and the Wupperman home represents their best work.
- The home pre-dated the surrounding W.A. Harper subdivision of 1923 and was situated adjacent to historic Hyde Park.

Historical Associations:

- Walter and Else Wupperman were children/grandchildren of German immigrant pioneers who significantly contributed to the settlement of Texas and Austin including: the von Rosenbergs, the Lungkwitz, and the Tips families.
- Walter Wupperman was a professor of German at the University of Texas and, later, a Deputy for the Internal Revenue Service.
- Walter and Else Wupperman reared five children in their home on Texas Avenue and guarded their German heritage in difficult times during World War I and the Great Depression. The family persevered through cultural prejudice and difficult financial times to preserve their home and family. This family and their unique struggle represent a significant portrayal of a group of people in a historic time.

- The Wupperman children grew to be successful professionals and homemakers. Alice Wupperman Lundy became the supervising librarian for the Mallet library at U.T. and head librarian at the Harbor Hospital in Torrence, California. Ernest Wupperman became a doctor of veterinary medicine and opened the Wupperman Animal Hospital and later the Wupperman-Spangler Animal Hospital in Austin. Alfred Wupperman was a draftsman for the Army Corps of Engineers and a liberal writer in his prolific "letters to the editors" of Texas newspapers. Helene Wupperman Dinwiddie taught dancing, swimming, and tennis for the City of Austin Recreation Department, married and reared a family. Helene and her daughter Sue Onstott graciously provided materials and memories for this narrative. Viola Wupperman Lindsay was a lapidary artist as well as a wife and mother.
- Guenther Oswald, nationally recognized woodworker and restoration specialist, lived with the Wupperman family for several years after immigrating from Germany. His first workshop was in the basement of the home. His woodcraft and restoration projects include furniture for the Texas Governor's Mansion, the Walter Tips carriage, Boule cabinets at the Neill-Cochran House, and a hand-hewn altar cross at the First Presbyterian Church.
- Frances Stephenson Gerdes was a teacher at the historic Palm School in downtown Austin.
