PROPOSAL

Demolish a ca. 1927 house.

ARCHITECTURE

One-and-a-half story rectangular-plan side-gabled frame bungalow with a central, front-gabled dormer inset from the slope of the roof with a plain railing across the front of the dormer, a full-width inset porch on brick piers with concrete caps and double plain square wood posts; paired 1:1 fenestration.

RESEARCH

The house was built around 1927 by Frederick A. Finn, the father of Selmar A. Finn, who with his wife, Bennie, lived in the house for the rest of their lives. Selmar and Bennie Finn appear in census records dating back to 1910, when they were farmers in Wharton County; by 1920, they were living in Bastrop, where Selmar operated a meat market. They moved to Austin in the mid-1920s, and Selmar had a meat market at 206 W. 6th Street. By 1930, he was working as a meat-cutter for Clarence Saunders, who had a meat market at 202 W. 6th Street. In the early 1930s, Finn opened his own meat market again at 504 W. 19th (now MLK) Street, very close to this house, then moved it back to the 300 block of W. 6th Street in the mid-1930s. After his death in 1937, his widow, Bennie, continued to live in this house until her death in 1969. By the early 1980s, the house was being used for commercial purposes – a used clothing store, Once More With Feeling, operated here in the early 1980s; the house then became the home of Atomic City, a novelty, toy, and hip clothing store, until very recently. The house is now vacant.

STAFF COMMENTS

The house is listed in the Comprehensive Cultural Resources Survey (1984) with a Priority 2 for research.

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Encourage the applicant to consider relocation of the house over demolition, but release the permit after completion of a City of Austin Documentation Package, consisting of elevations of all four sides of the house, a dimensioned sketch plan, and a narrative history of the building. The house has neither the architectural nor the historical significance to warrant individual designation as a historic landmark, but is a very good representative example of a classic bungalow derivative.

The 1930 U.S. Census report shows Selmar and Bennie Finn at this house at 1700 San Antonio Street. They owned the house, which was worth $6,000. They had a lodger, Hugo Auler, 28, a physician. The census report shows that Selmar Finn was then 50, had been born in Texas to a French-born father and a Swedish-born mother, and worked as a meat cutter at Saunders Store. Bennie Finn was then 49, had been born in Texas, and had no occupation listed. They had no children listed in the census report. The same census report shows that his father, Fredrick Finn, was then 76, had been born in Germany, and was a tinner with his own tin shop. He lived at 500 E. 4th Street, a house that was worth $10,000; he and his wife had two roomers there.

The 1920 U.S. Census shows Selmar and Bennie Finn living in Bastrop, Texas, where he was the proprietor of a butcher shop. The 1910 U.S. Census report shows Selmar and Bennie Finn living in Wharton County, Texas, where he was a farmer. The family does not appear to be listed in the 1900 census report.
