STNP - (Continued)

from the project....if we could legally do so and how that would impact the ratepayer. That is a hypothetical analysis but we have done that and with that in mind the report is in front of you indicating the variety of costs. In the first five years, cancellation would bring a lower cost than maintenance because we would no longer have to make payments. However, in 1987 we would start to have power coming from the project and at that point the curve shifts markedly in favor of retention of the project. So that by the year 1996 the cost to the ratepayer is some 3% less with retention of the project....." He said the hypothetical project assumes the project will be completed on time and generating power in 1987. It assumes we would use gas fired generation to replace nuclear.

COMMITTEE REPORT

Jack Evins, chairman, Austin Tomorrow On-Going Committee, discussed suggestions for amending the Committee composition. He said they passed a resolution which suggests instead of having two appointees, a member and an alternate from each of the ten geographic zones, that there be just one appointee from each zone and that there be three at-large appointees. He further recommended that all current appointees come up for appointment June 1 of this year rather than half of them to allow Council to consider redesignation and also to solicit feed back from current appointees as to whether or not they feel they are going to be able to continue to contribute under this arrangement. They also recommend that if there are to be more alternates reapply, than can be included within the at large arrangement, that there be as many at large appointees made at this point to accommodate those who express such an interest until such a time as attrition or expiration of terms reduces that number to the total of 13. Mr. Evins said they feel this will continue to represent the zones of the City as well as reduce the size of the committee with a savings to the Planning Department.
