Additional Backup Information

Until 2013, the City of Austin and Capital Area Council of Governments (CAPCOG) cooperated through interlocal agreements in delivering emergency 9-1-1 service in Austin and Travis County. The delivery of 9-1-1 service requires maintaining and upgrading equipment and software, providing supplies to employees, training employees and maintaining the 9-1-1 database for the areas served. The City provided these services and was reimbursed by CAPCOG annually.

As of September, 2013, the Capital Area Emergency Communications District (CACHED) is the entity responsible for the 9-1-1 system in the area. The State of Texas created this political subdivision to establish and maintain Next Generation 9-1-1 emergency communications services within the District. The City established an ILA with CAECD at that time. The agreement is set to expire at the end of September.

This RCA is requesting approval of a new ILA with CAECD with a start date of October 1, 2014 to end on September 30, 2015.
