PROPOSAL

Demolish a ca. 1950 house.

ARCHITECTURE

One-story, wing-and-gable plan, brick-veneered minimal traditional frame house with a partial-width shed-roofed independent porch on ornamental metal supports; single and paired 1:1 fenestration.

RESEARCH

The house was built in 1950 by Hickman T. Baker, a local carpenter, who lived on Breeze Terrace. The first owners and occupants of the house were Bruce and Rhudell Allen, who lived here until around 1953. Bruce Allen was an assistant State Attorney General. Annie Giles owned and occupied the house from the mid-1950s until the early 1970s. She was a single woman whose family had been in the wallpaper business for many years in Austin. During the time she lived here, she was either listed as retired or with no occupation. Lee E. Thompson, a technician for IBM who then worked as an engineering aide at the State Highway Department, was the owner and occupant of the house with his wife, Bessie, through the 1990s.

STAFF COMMENTS

The house does not appear in any City survey.

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Encourage adaptive re-use and retention of the house if feasible; otherwise, release the permit upon completion of a City of Austin Documentation Package consisting of photographs of all elevations, a dimensioned sketch plan, and a narrative history, for archiving at the Austin History Center. The house has neither the historical nor the architectural significance to warrant individual designation as a historic landmark.

Steve:

The neighborhood is still in favor of reuse when possible. The builder met with some of the adjacent neighbors and said they would incorporate what was suggested if they can into the design.

I have asked for a red line version of these suggestions to at least have something on paper.

Is there anything else we can do to help insure these get implemented? My understanding is that issuance of the demolition permit is more or less automatic at this phase, with maybe some comments or special conditions from the Historical Landmark Commission. Is this correct?

Thank you for your assistance.
