- Myth: Incentives are done behind closed doors
  - Austin received a perfect score for Transparency of Economic Agreements by Good Jobs First (Washington, DC)
- Myth: Money for incentives could be used for parks, public safety, libraries, and other similar purposes
  - If a project doesn't locate in Austin, there is no money from the project
  - Using WebLOCI, the City negotiates with the profit from each project
  - Only cash positive proposals are brought forward
- Fact: All agreements are performance-based, meaning incentives are paid only after performance. No clawbacks are necessary.

- Myth: Companies come to the City asking for incentives
  - Through Opportunity Austin, the City markets itself to businesses in targeted industry sectors that want to locate or expand in Austin.
- Fact: Evaluation Matrix qualifies companies that embrace Austin's core community values including, but not limited to:
  - Extend benefits to domestic partners and their dependents
  - Provide employees training and opportunities for advancement
  - Good wages and employee diversity in hiring and promotion
- Fact: 21 agreements executed since 2003; 2 Per Year (Average)

LESSONS LEARNED

CH 380 AGREEMENTS

Do not provide incentives in advance of performance

- Fee waivers provided to Intel in advance
- Construction halted and project remained unfinished

- Negotiate only with the profit
  - Austin uses fiscal impact analysis software to compute local revenues and expenses related to a project
  - All city costs such as parks, library, and public safety are accounted for before developing an incentive
  - Projects incentivized since 2010 implementation resulted in an estimated return on investment of 239.0%

CH 380 AGREEMENTS

- Get behind one regional economic development plan
  - The City of Austin Economic Development Department is the largest contributor to the Opportunity Austin Regional Economic Development Program
  - Focus is on:
    - Economic Diversity
    - Education & Talent
    - Transportation & Infrastructure

- Develop a local policy that incorporates community values
  - Austin's economic development policy reflects a focus on:
    - Transparency
    - Return on investment (profitability)
    - Desired growth locations
    - Employee diversity and wages, character of jobs, and labor practices
    - Benefits to local small businesses
    - Linkages to the local economy
    - Infrastructure impact
    - Additional considerations for hiring economically-disadvantaged workers, local hiring, location within growth corridors and adjacency to transit locations, utilization of alternative transportation modes, and workforce training

Thank you
