PROPOSAL

Partial demolition of a ca. 1934 house to construct a second-story addition.

ARCHITECTURE

One-story, rectangular-plan, side-gabled, Tudor Revival-styled brick-veneered house with a front-facing gable containing a triple set of 1:1 windows, and another front-facing gabled bay containing the round-arched entry way with a series of receding brick layers framing the door; fenestration on the house also includes narrow, multi-lite wood-framed casement windows with a multi-lite transom above.

RESEARCH

The house appears to have been built in 1934, but was vacant for the first year or so of its existence. The first known owners and occupants were Rudolph Wukasch, and his wife, Ruth, who lived here from around 1936 until around 1948. Rudolph Wukasch was the son of Henry Wukasch, a very prominent and successful general merchandise merchant, with his store on the west corner of 1st (now Cesar Chavez) Street and Congress Avenue. Rudolph Wukasch served as his father's book-keeper and later was the manager of the store. Henry Wukasch stayed in business until 1946. After the store closed, Rudolph and Ruth Wukasch moved to Santa Barbara, California, where they spent the rest of their lives.

The house was then owned by Jimmy and Yvonne Greear; he was a student at the University of Texas, and she was a secretary in an advertising agency while they lived in this house in the late 1940s. Euelda Wood, a widow, then purchased the house around 1953 after her husband's death. Euelda's husband, Franklin A. Wood, was an auditor for the State Liquor Control Board. Euelda Wood worked as a clerk. After her death in 1978, her daughter, Inez Lewis, an art teacher, lived here until the early 1990s.

STAFF COMMENTS

The applicant proposes the partial demolition of the house to accommodate a second-story addition. Staff has reviewed the plans for the addition, which is sensitively designed and planned. The proposed addition will be located on the back of the house, and will have 818 square feet on the ground floor, and 1,283 square feet on the second floor. The proposed addition is in line with the north wall of the house, and built completely behind the ridge line of the existing roof. The addition will have a brick veneer, as well as stucco on the second story to match existing materials, and single and paired 1:1 fenestration that complement those on the existing house. Additional space on the second story will be achieved through longitudinal shed dormers on both sides of the proposed pitched roof. The roof will have composition shingles to match those on the existing portion of the house.

The house was listed with no priority for research in the Comprehensive Cultural Resources Survey (1984).

Staff has evaluated this house for designation as a historic landmark and has determined that the house has some potential for designation as a historic landmark, and would be contributing to a historic district in this neighborhood:

- a. Architecture. The house is an excellent example of Tudor Revival residential architecture, with its brick veneer, false half-timbering in side gables, steeply pitched roof, and decorative elements, especially the round-arched doorway and narrow sets of casement windows, which set this house apart from other Tudor Revival houses in the neighborhood and throughout the city. The house qualifies for landmark designation for its architectural significance.

- b. Historical association. The house was built by Rudolph Wukasch, the son of Henry Wukasch, a well-known merchant in the city; Rudolph Wukasch was very involved in his father's business. Rudolph and Ruth Wukasch lived in this house during the entire time of their residency in Austin as a married couple, from the mid-1930s until they moved to Santa Barbara, California in the late 1940s. Although more research is necessary to fully flesh out the role and significance of Rudolph Wukasch to the community, it appears that there is a potential for landmark designation for the historical associations of the Wukasch family in Austin.
- c. Archaeology. The house was not evaluated for its potential to yield significant data concerning the human history or prehistory of the region.
- d. Community value. The house does not possess a unique location, physical characteristic, or significant feature that contributes to the character, image, or cultural identity of the city, the neighborhood, or a particular demographic group.
- e. Landscape feature. The property is not a significant natural or designed landscape with artistic, aesthetic, cultural, or historical value to the city.

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Approve the plans for the addition to the house, which staff recognizes as sensitive to the architecture and character of the existing house, and release the partial demolition permit, but request that the applicant complete a City of Austin Documentation Package, consisting of photographs of all elevations, a dimensioned sketch plan, and a narrative history, for archiving at the Austin History Center prior to the release of any permit.

After 42 Years, Merchant Retires To Take Up Hobbies

By WILLIAM J. WEEG
The American-Statesman Staff

Henry Wukasch has closed up shop and gone fishing. After spending 42 years in the general mercantile business the 66-year-old Austin business man decided he would retire and indulge in his hobbies of fishing and hunting and look after his extensive property interests, including special attention to a fine citrus orchard of 12 1-2 acres seven miles from Brownsville.

Having disposed of all of his merchandise stock and fixtures during the last few weeks, Wukasch locked the door at his general merchandise store at 104-106 West First Street for the last time on Sept. 30. The following morning the place was opened as a wholesale meat market serving hotels, restaurants and boarding houses by Marvin and Raymond Knippa, who have leased the building.

And to climax his first week of retirement, Wukasch celebrated his 66th birthday anniversary Saturday.

With his retirement from business came the termination of a business institution that was one of the best known and most popular in Central Texas, for the Wukasch general store was the gathering place of farmers and ranchmen within 75 miles of Austin. Here came men and women from Giddings to exchange news with those from Fredericksburg and those from Walburg mingled with visitors from Burnet.

Into this general store came the pecans, butter, eggs, chickens and turkeys from the farms throughout Central Texas to be exchanged for flour, sugar, and a lot of other items that the farmers needed in their households.

Many Stories Told

Into the Wukasch store came the hunters in quest of shells and the fishermen seeking rods and reels and tackle and hooks. Many fishing and hunting stories were told within the four walls of this institution.

Citizens of Austin found the Wukasch store the place to find items they were looking for. Here could be purchased anything from a needle up to a plow.

"In fact, I would sell a man a coffin if he wanted one," Wukasch asserted.

It was on June 7, 1904, that Henry Wukasch, then 24 years of age, decided to invest $150 in a store and with T. J. Christal of Austin, he opened in a building at 100-102 Congress Avenue under the name of Christal and Wukasch. After eight years of operation under this partnership, Wukasch purchased Christal's interest in January, 1912, the purchase including the store, buildings and fixtures. The firm had acquired the two buildings at 104-106 West First Street which then were used as warehouses for the general merchandise store stock.

Tribute Paid Partner

Six years afterwards, Wukasch leased the Congress Avenue location to the Grayburg Oil Company for use as a filling station. The building was razed and Wukasch moved the store to the West First Street location where he operated the store until he retired from business last Monday night.

"Christal was my first partner who helped to start me in business," Wukasch said in tribute.

"My next good partner was my wife, who helped me to build the business."

His wife and partner in the business was Mrs. Matilda Wukasch, who died six years ago, after serving for 32 years as his mate and helper. Wukasch 18 months ago married Mrs. Annabel Carter of Austin and they are making their home at 104 East 26th Street, adjoining the two-story frame residence on Speedway where Henry and Matilda Wukasch reared their two children, Rudolph Wukasch and Martha Wukasch, the latter now Mrs. Martha Christal, who has been living in Memphis, Tenn., for the past 10 years.

Wukasch paid tribute to Mrs. Wukasch and the two children for their loyal cooperation and help in making the Wukasch general merchandise one of the leading business firms in Austin for more than four decades.

Early Prices Quoted

Mrs. Christal, the daughter, served as bookkeeper and cashier for 10 or 12 years while Rudolph was reared in the store and worked there for more than 30 years. When Mrs. Christal moved to Memphis, Mrs. Wukasch took over the duties of cashier and Rudolph served as bookkeeper.

During the early years of the store's operation, Wukasch said he paid farmers 5 cents a dozen for eggs and sold them to his customers at 25 cents for three dozen in contrast to today when eggs are selling for a nickel apiece and more. Sugar was quoted at 20 pounds for $1 and it took only a dollar to buy 20 pounds of salt bacon. Hams, which now cost 58 to 60 cents a pound if obtainable at all, used to sell anywhere from 93-4 to 121-2 cents a pound, while butter could be purchased at Wukasch's in the early days for 10 to 15 cents a pound in comparison with 75 to 85 cents a pound in 1946.

"Now that I have disposed of my business I am going to pay more attention to my orchard near Brownsville," Wukasch declared. "Last year the orchard, which has 788 trees—grapefruit, oranges and other citrus fruits—on it, produced 100 tons, but with closer supervision could have yielded 200 tons," he added.

During his leisure hours at home, Wukasch likes to work with flowers and shrubs and he has gained a neighborhood reputation for the various varieties of flowers to be found in the garden in the rear of his home.

In between time he plans to pursue his favorite diversions of hunting and fishing. His favorite fishing place is Cow Creek about 40 miles from Austin in the hills west of here.

Just about that time one of his fishing companions entered the door of the First Street store.

"He's waiting for me now to go fishing with him," Wukasch remarked.

With that, Wukasch finished the story of his 42 years in business, put on his hat, and joined his fishing partner for an afternoon of relaxation.
