The proposed regional stormwater detention facility is located on the main branch of Walnut Creek and is designed to reduce peak flows from a 6-month to a 100-year storm event to reduce flood hazards and to reduce stream erosion. The limits of construction for this facility encompass approximately 20 acres and the footprint of the earthen embankment is approximately 7.6 acres. The facility is located southeast of the intersection of Parmer Lane and McNeil Road, west of the Union Pacific Railroad, within the Robinson Ranch Planned Unit Development (PUD).

Flood hazard and stream erosion reduction benefits will extend to about 5 miles downstream of the dam (downstream of Metric Blvd.) Floodplain inundation will be reduced for 77 structures (homes, businesses and roadways).

Environmental Enhancements: The project includes maintaining an existing wetland, additional plantings to enhance the existing wetland and reforesting an existing detention pond in the project area (approximately 5 acres) with native trees.

Under the City's Drainage Criteria Manual policy, the City's Regional Stormwater Management Program (RSMP) fee revenues are collected by watershed and dedicated for use on flood hazard reduction within that watershed. Fees are collected from participating land development activities in lieu of requiring on-site detention facilities. Funds collected for the Walnut Creek watershed are available for transfer and appropriation in the capital budget. The additional transfer authorized in this budget amendment is required to fully fund the construction of the Upper Walnut Creek Regional Detention Facility.
