Emma Carter Browning

October 26, 1920 – April 23, 2010

Austin's First Lady of Aviation

Emma Browning was an aviation pioneer in Texas and one of the few female presidents of a general aviation company. She, along with her husband Robert Browning Jr., made aviation her life. Emma Browning helped to develop and manage early fixed base operations enabled by the Air Commerce Act of 1926, resulting in the need for licensed aircraft mechanics and training standards at the growing number of airports appearing throughout the United States. During her early career she became acquainted with Amelia Earhart and Charles Lindbergh.

By 1939, Emma Browning, a licensed pilot, moved to Austin with her family to lease the University Airport in Austin, Texas. There they began training pilots through the Civilian Pilot Training Program (CPTP). In 1942, the CPTP became the War Training Service and the Brownings trained pilots for the U.S. Army Air Corps. Their flight school was the only licensed training facility to offer advanced aerobatic training in the Waco UPF-7 aircraft.

After World War II, Browning Aerial Service moved to the city-owned Robert Mueller Municipal Airport, where they provided maintenance, storage, charters, sales, and flight instruction—teaching many Central Texas how to fly. In 1973, after the death of her husband, Emma Browning took over one of Austin's oldest companies. She continued as its president until 1987 when she sold the business to a firm that eventually became Signature Flight Services.

Emma Browning was passionate about general aviation, and helped with the formation of the National Air Transportation Association, the Civil Aeronautics Administration and the Texas Aeronautics Commission. In 2003 the Texas Department of Transportation gave her its lifetime achievement award, and Texas Governor Rick Perry declared her a, "Texas aviation hero." In 2005 she was inducted into the Texas Aviation Hall of Fame as, "Austin's First Lady of Aviation."

Re: Street Name Change to honor Ms Emma Browning

Dear Ms Winfrey:

Thank you for your letter advising us of the city's plan to rename General Aviation Avenue at the Austin Bergstrom Airport to Emma Browning Avenue, in honor of our aunt.

Her family members wholeheartedly support this and appreciate the efforts of all those involved in facilitating the change.

The field of aviation was her life and it is so fitting that she will be honored in this manner.

Thank you,
