Additional Backup Information:
The global spread of Covid-19 has resulted in unprecedented health and economic impact to Austin’s citizens and small business community. Consistent with guidance from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), State and local public health authorities, and in the interest of safeguarding our community, the City of Austin, like cities across the globe, has instituted social distancing measures to slow the progression of Covid-19, in an effort to reduce the overall impact and duration of the virus.

For many local Austin businesses, the economic impact began with the cancellation of Austin’s Annual SXSW event, which was estimated to generated $355.9 million in economic benefit to Austin’s economy in 2019.

To address the economic impact to local businesses and provide support to retain employees until a recovery can begin the Economic Development Department is executing an Economic Injury Disaster Loan Program.

The Economic Injury Disaster Loan program provides working capital loans for up to $35,000 subject to need for small businesses located in one of Austin’s 10 districts, and that can demonstrate economic injury associated with COVID-19 global pandemic.

The program offers low-interest loans at extended terms to provide an economically injured business the ability to distribute a loss over an extended period of time, thus mitigating a sudden impact and injecting vital working capital to retain employees into a recovery period.

The Austin EIDLP is designed to work as gap financing in conjunction with an applicant’s request for federal assistance from the Small Business Administration (SBA) Economic Injury Disaster Loans as funding become available.

In FY 2019-20, the Family Business Loan Program Fund has $1.2M available for loans.

Strategic Outcome(s):
Economic Opportunity and Affordability.
