

The Translating Community History project aims to use creative archival practices to highlight the significance of East Austin neighborhoods. Open Chair and The Projecto, with support from the City of Austin Historic Preservation Office and the National Park Service, collaborated to create portraits and collect stories that celebrate the cultural and built heritage of these storied Black and Brown communities. Find more information at www.austintexas.gov/page/current-projects and submit your story at theopenchair.co.

EQUITY-BASED HISTORIC PRESERVATION PLAN

Briefing to Design Commission—March 28, 2022

GOAL

Replace Austin's 1981 preservation plan with an inclusive, equity-focused, and community-oriented process and outcome

WHY NOW?

- Substantial population growth
- High development pressure

WHY NOW?

- Substantial population growth
- High development pressure

EQUITY + COMMUNITY FOCUS

- How can we better recognize, preserve, and share important places and stories?
- How can preservation policies and tools address essential issues like sustainability, affordability, and displacement?
- How can citizens co-create preservation policies?

EQUITY + COMMUNITY FOCUS

The Latino Collection and Resource Center, in partnership with the Westside Preservation Alliance and the Esperanza Peace and Justice Center, presents:

HISTORIC PRESERVATION AS A SOCIAL JUSTICE IMPERATIVE

Wednesday, May 22, 2019 @ 6:30PM

This panel discussion will consider the role of historic preservation in the broader context of civil rights and social justice, how we can increase equity in historic preservation, how we can engage our communities in historic preservation to save our neighborhoods, and current challenges to inclusion in preservation policy, education, and recruitment at local and national levels.

HISTORY MATTERS

Root causes and current-day inequities

GENOCIDE AND COLONIZATION OF NATIVE AND INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Multiple genocides were committed on the native people of Central Texas. Natives were hunted, detained, converted, and colonized in successive waves of white, Mexican, and other occupations. Amongst the violence, Natives were racialized in a way that slated them for extermination and denied them the most basic notion of human agency. Ethnic cleansing as a strategy, sometimes explicit—sometimes implicit—was thoroughly employed.

ISOLATION OF MEXICAN AMERICANS, SEIZURE OF PROPERTY, AND LYNCHING

Following the Mexican-American War, those of Mexican descent were isolated within the Republic of Texas and later the State of Texas. Only white men were allowed to vote and have representation in government. Under the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Mexican citizens in Texas were allowed to retain Mexican citizenship or become U.S. citizens. Those who held property and personal wealth after the Mexican-American War often lost it due to questionable land sales and lawsuits. White Texans were almost as likely to lynch Mexican American men as they were to lynch African Americans.

ENSLAVEMENT AND COLONIZATION OF AFRICAN PEOPLE

Exploitation of the labor of enslaved African people was part of Texas's original colonization under Spanish rule. Despite being outlawed under Mexican rule following independence from Spain, Stephen F. Austin and many white settlers actively worked to guarantee their right to hold slaves. Slavery was legal in the Republic of Texas and free Black people were banished. The enslavement of Black people continued when Texas joined the United States and, later, the Confederate States of America. Even after the Emancipation Proclamation legally ended slavery, white plantation owners refused to release their enslaved workers until Federal troops were sent to Texas two years later. Discrimination and violence by white people against Black people continued for many decades in the Jim Crow South.

"No Peon [Mexican American] remains in the city, who is not vouched for by respectable citizens. It should be the duty of every citizen to aid in preserving the present state of things."

- State Gazette

Austin's long history of systemic racism led to disparities in housing, transportation, health, education, and economic outcomes. Many of the racial inequities that exist today are a direct result of past and current laws, ordinances, and city planning.

DISPLACEMENT OF FREEDOM COLONIES

Communities such as Clarksville, Wheatville, Kincheonville, Masontown, and Gregorytown were established by formerly enslaved people after the Civil War and interspersed throughout the city and its outskirts. To enforce racial segregation and the relocation of Black families to East Austin, the City denied them the public services enjoyed by surrounding neighborhoods such as paved streets, sidewalks, street lighting, sewers, and flood control measures. Clarksville's streets were not paved until the 1970s. Meanwhile, racist local policies and discriminatory banking practices made it difficult for residents to maintain or improve their homes.

1854

VIGILANTE TARGETING AND REMOVAL OF MEXICAN AMERICANS

Many white Austinites saw Mexican Americans as a transient class that instilled "false notions of freedom" in enslaved people, even though Mexican Americans as a group were long-established in the area. A vigilante committee led by the mayor and other prominent citizens worked to forcibly remove all Mexican Americans from Travis County unless vouched for by whites. They drove out about twenty families. The few Mexican Americans who remained in Travis County—only 20 people in 1860—were given a curfew. The local Mexican American population remained low throughout the Civil War, although records indicate that Mexican Americans fought on both sides of the war. Most Mexican Americans did not return to Travis County until the mid-1870s.

1870s

EARLY CHINESE IMMIGRANTS WERE PROHIBITED FROM OWNING PROPERTY

Discriminatory laws denied Chinese immigrants (who were prohibited from citizenship under federal law) the right to own property in Austin. The spouses of these immigrants could be stripped of their U.S. citizenship and its benefits.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION

What does preservation do?

BRIEF #1 FOR PRESERVATION PLAN WORKING GROUP | JULY 2021

Identify historic resources

Important historic properties are identified proactively through surveys or citizen curiosity...

...Or reactively through a demolition application, where staff uncover important information about the resource during routine permit review.

Preserve historic resources

Preservation of important resources happens through historic designation. Historic designation at the local level can be initiated by the property owner, community members (for historic districts), or the Historic Landmark Commission. Historic resources can also be designated at the state and federal levels, with different levels of protection.

Visit the Historic Property Viewer to see historic landmarks, historic districts, and National Register districts.

Binding City review

Advisory City review of major projects

Historic preservation recognizes and safeguards significant places—and can play an important role in shaping the future. Preservation in Austin includes many activities; this overview focuses on the City's Historic Preservation Office and Historic Landmark Commission.

Steward historic resources

City staff work with property owners to ensure that changes to historic resources meet occupant needs while retaining the property's important historic features. Read the Historic Design Standards used to evaluate most projects.

Small changes can be approved administratively by staff. The Historic Landmark Commission reviews larger and/or more visible changes. Repair, maintenance, and interior changes do not require historic review.

Historic tax credits

Local Code citations, legal action (exceedingly rare)
State and National Register
legal action (for State resources, exceedingly rare)

Outreach and engagement

Most community members find out about nearby historic projects and potential historic resources via mailed notifications of Historic Landmark Commission hearings. These mailings are required by City Code. Historic resource surveys are a way to learn more about the history of certain areas. Typically conducted by consultants, the survey process includes large public meetings and other opportunities for input.

Historic district applications require extensive outreach and engagement by community applicant teams. City staff supports these efforts.

Economic Development Department: administers heritage tourism grants

HISTORIC LANDMARK COMMISSION
Recommends historic zoning to City Council
Reviews major changes to historic properties
Reviews heritage grant applications and tax exemption applications
Makes policy recommendations to City Council

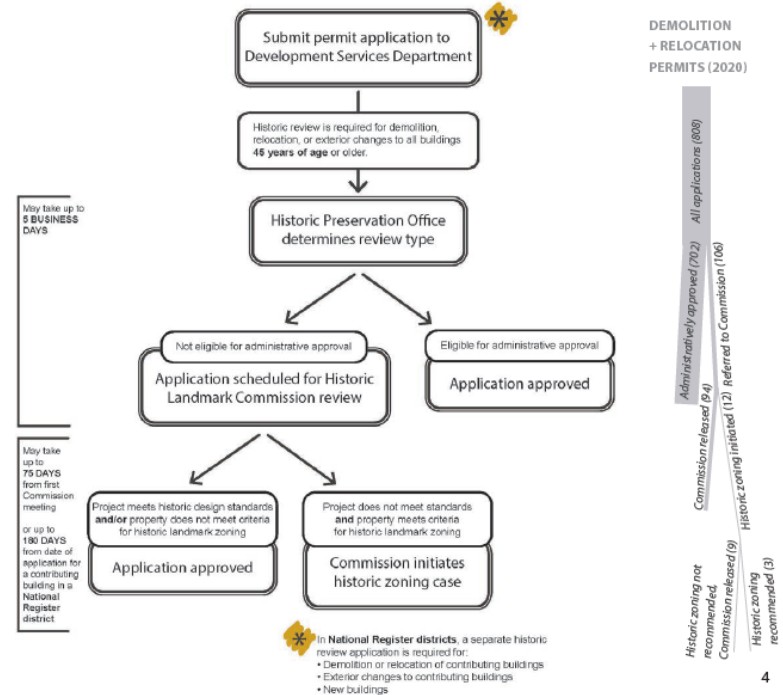

Historic review

Historic-age properties

Historic Preservation Office staff review demolitions, relocations, and exterior changes to historic-age properties (45+ years old). Staff approve 87% of these applications administratively, and most people are not aware their project has gone through historic review.

Following the Land Development Code, staff refer some properties to the Historic Landmark Commission for review and potential designation:

- Properties that have not been changed substantially (retain integrity) and may meet two criteria for historic designation
- Properties that a historic resource survey has identified as eligible for landmark designation or contribute to a potential historic district
- All civic buildings, such as churches, educational facilities, and other institutions

2. Respect community-based knowledge? Is it based on community-identified needs and input?

3. Increase equitable access to information about historic preservation and equip people to take action?
Is it clear to people without previous preservation experience?

4. Recognize and honor the cultures, historic assets, traditions, and stories of historically underrepresented communities in meaningful ways?

5. Ground its reasoning and expected outcomes in good practices around equity, including racially disaggregated data?

6. Balance big-picture thinking with specific, actionable, measurable items that recognize and redress historical inequities, both isolated and systemic?

7. Improve access to preservation policies, programs, tools, and incentives for Black, Indigenous, and People of Color (BIPOC) and low-income communities?

8. Avoid creating financial or other burdens for BIPOC communities and low-income people? If yes, are there opportunities to mitigate these impacts? Does it place responsibility on institutions to address historical disparities in historic preservation policies, programs, and tools?

9. Advance affordability, economic opportunities, and environmental sustainability for everyone, and especially for BIPOC communities? If not, are there opportunities to do so?

10. Engage and empower BIPOC communities to actively participate in implementation?

Equity-Based Historic Preservation Plan

La versión en español sigue a continuación.

Background

The equity-based historic preservation plan (phase 1, 2021–22) will replace Austin's 1981 preservation plan with an inclusive, equity-focused, and community-oriented process and outcome. A working group composed of historic preservation professionals, stakeholders from allied fields, and community representatives is tackling pressing questions: Whose heritage is represented in designated historic properties, and what stories are missing? Who benefits from preservation policies, programs, and incentives? How can historic preservation tools be expanded to address essential issues such as sustainability, affordability, and displacement?

Phase 1 will result in a draft historic preservation plan, including recommendations Continue reading

Thank you for your interest in participating in small group conversations to inform the equity-based historic preservation plan! Three small groups will provide targeted input on recommendations for the plan. Each group will meet 2-3 times between November 2021 and June 2022, with participation expected to take about 10 hours total. Meetings will be held remotely until guidance from Austin Public Health allows for in-person meetings
