

SUMMARY OF NEIGHBORHOOD PLANS

Prepared by Opticos Design and the City of Austin

DRAFT 2-5-14

An important component of understanding the existing regulatory framework and understanding community character is to analyze the adopted neighborhood plans.

The Community Character Analysis is intended to identify how neighborhoods throughout Austin are similar and how they are different. By analyzing the goals stated in the neighborhood plans, we can identify issues of common concern as well as issues that are specific to individual neighborhoods. These similarities and differences will help to develop a Code which is more finely tuned and appropriate to different kinds of places throughout Austin.

The CodeNEXT team examined the 29 adopted neighborhood plans and created several documents to summarize the plans and aid in understanding the priorities and concerns of different neighborhoods.

Neighborhood Plan Goals Table

This table found on page 2 is a listing of the goals contained in each adopted neighborhood plan which categorizes each goal into one or more general themes according to the ideas it contained. Some goals contained more than one theme, and some themes were expressed in more than one goal. For example, the goal to “create a safe and attractive neighborhood where daily needs can be met by walking, cycling, or transit” was classified into three themes:

- public safety;
- complete streets; and
- transit

The theme of public safety was also expressed in the goal to “address criminal activity in the neighborhood and promote public safety.”

Themes from Neighborhood Plan Goals Detailed Table

This table found on page 19 is a listing the themes contained in each plan and tabulating the number of times that each theme was expressed in the goals.

Themes from Neighborhood Plan Goals Summary Table

This table found on page 20, is a listing the number of times that a particular theme appeared in one or more goals across all the neighborhood plans, as well as the number of neighborhood plans in which the theme appeared.
