

Enter into a simulated limestone cave to experience the mysteries of Barton Springs and the Edwards Aquifer.

Learn about the inner workings of the aquifer and why it is one of Austin's most important natural resources through multimedia displays, interactive exhibits and games.

The endangered Barton Springs salamander and other native aquatic species on display demonstrate the diversity of life dependent on the water quality of local springs, creeks and rivers. To find out more visit the Salamander Homepage of the City of Austin Watershed Protection Department.

A small theater inside the exhibit is home to Living Springs, an documentary series in which viewers can access several dozen videos that tell the story of the Springs from many different perspectives.

For more information or to view the series online, visit livingspringsaustin.org.

